Association for Student Conduct Administration Annual Conference

"As a new professional, I at first felt very overwhelmed in this new space. I found myself questioning whether or not I belonged and possibly experienced some imposter syndrome as I prepped to spend the next few days learning about all things conduct. Nerves aside, I listened to the key note speakers discuss their experiences at Alabama State during the Dixon v. Alabama case that led to due process for students in public higher education. Rev. Dr. Eleanor Moody-Shepard, who was a student at Alabama State during the protest, stated "Historically, students change the world". This statement stuck with me throughout the conference because I found myself reflecting on how I view our students at Babson. I reflected on what our students are doing to change the world, and if I am helping them or hindering them throughout the process. Definitely a humbling realization for me."
